Why Habitat for Humanity is needed

The world is experiencing a global housing crisis. About 1.6 billion people live in substandard housing. 100 million are homeless. One billion people (32 percent of the global urban population) live in urban slums. In the U.S. alone, 95 million people have housing problems.

Housing provides:

- Stability for families and children. Sense of dignity and pride.
- Health. physical safety, and security.
- Increase of educational and job prospects.
- Attracts economic investment and development
- Housing is a great means of wealth creation Housing construction creates job opportunities
- The process of securing land tenure helps to increase access to credit. · Contributes to thriving school systems and commu- nity organizations. Housing must become a priority
- · The percentage of people without access to decent, stable housing is rising.
- Increasing the housing supply across the globe is essential.
- Adequate housing is vitally important to the health of the world's economies, communities, and populations

WWF: What We Do (*) PREPARE FOR CLIMATE CHANGE

Manaroves are trees and shrubs that grow in coastal areas. The planting of manaroves keeps rivers healthy an release important nutrients into the water. They protect shorelines in the Coral Triangle from storm surges and erosion, which are essential in the face of future climat change impacts. WWF supports mangrove refore many areas to reduce coastal communities' vulnerability climate change impacts. There are other added benefit as well. For example, mangrove nurseries provide income to local communities in Papua New Guinea. The replanted mangroves in the Philippines have led to the return of juvenile fish and crab species, improved water quality, a increased wildlife populations.

WWF also works to protect marine areas from overfishing and other stresses so that they have a better chance of recovering from climate change impacts such as coral bleaching. Some fish can actually help coral reefs recover after damage from bleaching events. As corals try to rebuild, they compete for space with seaweed. Colorful the use of alternative fishing hooks ("circle" hooks) and parrotfish graze on seaweed, which gives corals more room to grow and repopulate. The humphead wrasse also helps turtles from fishing nets. So far, WWF is having great results coral reefs recover; these enormous fish feed on crown-ofthorn starfish, which eat corals.

CREATE PROTECTED AREAS

WWF works to create a network of marine protected areas (MPAs) in the Coral Triangle. MPAs protect coral reefs and sea grass beds from destructive fishing practices and other unsustainable activities. They also allow damaged areas to recover, which is important for resilience against climate change. Protected areas allow fish to reproduce and grow to their adult size. This enables depleted fish populations to recover and increases fish catches in surrounding fishing waters. They provide refuge for other marine species too, such as endangered marine turtles and dugongs. WWF works to ensure protected areas are Member Services designed and managed well. We monitor fish spawning areas and the health of coral reefs, and study the impacts of protected areas on local co

S PROTECT MARINE TURTLES

WWF works to protect turtle nesting beaches and supports the monitoring of nest sites by local rangers. We create local awareness of the threats marine turtles face and work with local communities to reduce turtle harvesting and local trade. Exploitation of turtles is often driven by a lack of economic choices. WWF works to develop alternative livelihoods so that local people are no longer dependent on turtle products for income. We also work to reduce bycatch of turtles in fishing gear through promotion of "circle" hooks and turtle excluder devices in nets.

S REDUCE BYCATCH

To reduce bycatch—the accidental capture of nor target marine animals in fishing gear—WWF promotes advocates for the use of special devices that exclude been reduced and fishermen find the new hooks perform better than traditional hooks. We also aim to secure stronger policies and regulations on bycatch throughout the Coral Triangle so that alternative fishing gear car become standard practice across the region.

Spike In Illegal Wildlife Trade

The world is dealing with an unprecedented spike in illegal wildlife trade, threatening to overturn decades of conservation gains. Ivory estimated to weigh more than 23 metric tons—a figure that represents 2,500 elephants—was seized in the 13 largest seizures of illegal ivory in 2011. Poaching threatens the last of our wild tigers that number as few as 3,200.

Wildlife crime is a bia business. Run by danaerous international networks, wildlife and animal parts are trafficked much like illegal drugs and arms. By its ery nature, it is almost impossible to obtain reliable figures for the value of illegal wildlife trade. Experts at TRAFFIC, the wildlife trade monitoring network, estimate that it runs into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Some examples "Stamping out Wildlife crime is of illegal wildlife trade a priority of WWF" are well known, such as poaching o elephants fo and tigers for the skins and bones Countless othe species are similarly overexploited, from marine turtle timber trees. Not all wildlife trade illegal. Wild pla and animals from

tens of thousands of species are caught or harvested from the wild and then sold legitimately as food, pets, ornamental plants, leather, touris ornaments and medicine. Wildlife trade escalates into a crisis when an increasing proportion is illegal and unsustainable-directly threatening the survival of many species in the wild.

Stamping out wildlife crime is a priority for WWF because it's the largest direct threat to the future of many of the world's most nreatened species. It is second only to habitat destruction in overa threats against species survival. 📀
